

quite badly. Philip, the valiant, memorable man he is, crawled in, pulled me out, nursed me, and lifted me home on his back.

This shows what an open-minded, honourable soldier he was, a man we will remember fondly and hold in our hearts until the day comes when we ourselves will pass away. No one who ever knew your wonderful son will forget him. He died fighting for the cause that matters most to all of us in this horrible time, for King George and England, to set England free.

Let us all remember Philip,
Yours Empathetically,
Peter Adams.

P.S. If I ever come home, the next people I see, after my family, will be you.

I am very pleased with this Mrs Thomas. It is one of the best things I've written.
You have good judgement, Ruby.

There are outstanding elements of creative writing, clear organisation, sustained tone of voice, excellent vocabulary.

(57p)

Be aware that sometimes simple language can be more effective.